Audyo - 78/100

A platform for easily converting written content into spoken content

Round Size	$1 Million
Investment Series	Seed
Noted Investors	General Catalyst
Location	Newark, Delaware, USA
Total Raised	$1.85 Million

Is there really a Newark in Delaware? Evidently there is, and it contains a company called Audyo.ai that received a small seed investment from General Catalyst. Audio will always be important because it is something people can do while doing something else, and listeners actively share good audio content.

In a first, Audyo turns any written content into audio by using AI voice-generated audio. That means you can have your favorite Substack or blog, or the written text of your choice, and convert it into audio for your listening convenience. We all love podcasts, and this would allow us to determine for ourselves the content we most wanted to listen to and learn from. The AI reader sounds great, possibly superior to many inexpert narrators. The company may be the first to intro this capability, but couldn't someone else offer a similar capability? But is this or can this be a winner-takes-most opportunity? That was the question we dwelled on. There is a clearly andgrab here the first to partner with the most creators so we ended up at (8/10) on this dimension. In terms of viral growth and distribution, we scored it (9/10) in the belief that word should spread as anyone with a blog or other online written content should clearly see the benefit and relative ease of preparing an audyo version of their posts.

This is clearly something that we think people will want, so we rated PM Fit (8/10) as its only seed stage and could revise upwards as time reveals more. The Market Size (10/10) is enormous for podcasts, and as a software business it receives the blessing of the Holy Trinity with straight 10s for Gross Margin, Organizational and Operational Scalability.

Chalo - 90/100

Chalo develops a transport application that delivers real-time transit information.

Round Size	$13.9 Million
Investment Series	Unknown
Noted Investors	Lightrock, Matrix Partners
Location	Mumbai, India
Total Raised	$60.9 Million

Chalo is one of those rare businesses that scores over 90.

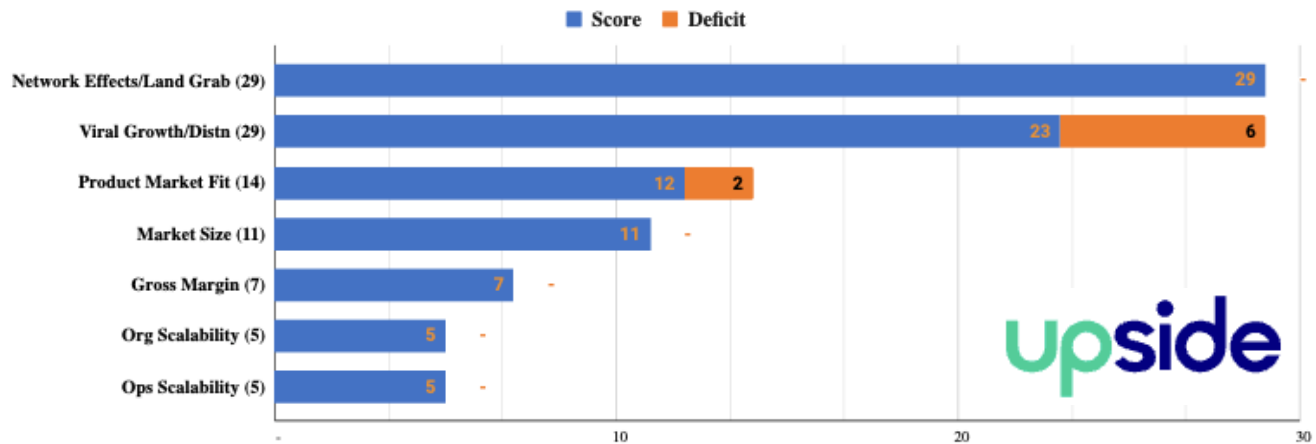

Chalo works with urban transit bus companies in the Indian market and provides them with an app that brings them into the modern age by allowing them to publish their routes, share real-time updates on bus locations, and sell tickets. Riders across India who've lacked access to this information until now should want this service that all of a sudden enables buses to become like Uber and riders don't need cash. As a result, we see a huge land grab opportunity here (9/10) to be the first to get the primary transportation providers in a given city onboarded, after which there should be user lock in-- after all, how many such apps would the cities (or the users) want to work with?

The bus companies themselves will assist with distribution and this should move quickly as passengers sees the adverts on buses and learn about the service and tell others (10/10). Chalo is well on its way to adoption and while this is still an earlier round we awarded it (9/10). Market Size and Gross Margin are both (10/10).

As a consumer facing app, they will have to deal with their fair share of customer issues with schedules, ticketing, safety and security, etc that cause us to penalize them on Organizational Scalability (8/10). Similarly, we can't give them full points for Operational Scalability (9/10) because, while we don't know for certain how they're actually doing it (IoT / hardware?) they clearly need a robust system to track the buses and that creates real world complexity.

Upside - 92/100

App that allows users to earn cash back at merchants

Round Size	$65 Million
Investment Series	Series D
Noted Investors	General Catalyst
Location	Washington DC, USA
Total Raised	$215 Million

Upside offers rewards / rebates for spending money at nearby participating merchants. Previous companies in this genre include iDine, Transmedia and Shopkick. This is a late stage (Series D) deal done by General Catalyst, with Bessemer participating in prior rounds. The app offers location-aware mobile-first discounts and flash promotions, fast turnaround, etc.

Upside should be able to avoid the fate of Groupon -- which failed due to poor PM Fit that was not good for the consumer and was a terrible loser for merchants -- because there's a delicate balance between rewards large enough to appeal to consumers and small enough to be economically viable and sustainable for the merchants, and they seem to be balancing this well (for example, 25 cents off a gallon of gas) and users have earned over $200M to date in rewards.

There are many winner-takes-most (10/10) elements taking place here, including marketplace selection driven by consumers wanting to join the platform with the most merchants, and merchants choosing the one with the most consumers, and a land grab opportunity to be the first to sign them all up. There are local network effects on a city-by-city basis since geography matters here in the majority of in-person use cases. In the case of viral growth and distribution (9/10), there is no visible viral component to this, but that could yet be added--just imagine how much larger this could still become if users could earn a piece of the action for what their friends consumed. PM Fit (9/10) was great--we tried the product ourselves -- and everyone wants discounts!

Gross Margin, Organizational Scalability and Operational Scalability are straight 10s. This is late, and the valuation may have surpassed our threshold, but we still felt it was worth highlighting because it really takes a lot to squeeze out a blitzscaling score of 92/100.
